Be Beautiful

Bringing Individual Features Up to Par.

BY AMIGAIL MOORE.

Few women give serious consideration to individual features, the nose and chin in particular being neglected. Both reflect the physical condition. Indigestion, nervousness and debility cause redness or eruption, and the source of the difficulty must therefore be looked after first. Of course, perfect cleanliness is essential, and that entails more than the cursory toilette.

Bathe the nose and chin in water as hot as can be borne. If the skin seems dry and harsh rub with a good skin food, and massage very gently from the tip to the bridge of the nose and from the lower part of the chin upward through to the center, where the movement should be horizontal. If the nose is thin, slip the thumb inside the nostril and massage cocoa butter into the skin. If the nose is fleshy and inclined, it is probably is, to oiliness of penetration, substitute glycerine for the cocoa butter.

In case of chapping or trouble inside the nose, make a douche of one drachm each of cooking soda, soda chloride, granulated sugar and borax, using a teaspoonful in a tumbler of water.

Steam heat is a prime cause of nose affection, drying the mucous membrane. A small basin of water should be kept on the radiators all the time to relieve the situation somewhat, and it is well to keep the nostrils lubricated at night with a little yellow vasoline.

While redness of nose and chin are extremely disagreeable, blackheads are even more to be dreaded. They are a sign of uncleanness, and a cure lies in a free use of the flesh brush with warm water and soap followed by dissection to further cleanse and close the pores.

For enlargement of the pores and also for redness the wariness of the nose is recommended. Dissolve in two ounces of glycerine, one drachm of muriate of ammonia and half a drachm of tannic acid, and then add three ounces of rose water. Rub nose or chin every night with absorbent cotton saturated with this lotion.

If the veins seem dilated apply several times a day the following lotion: Five grains of benzoin of soda, 200 grains mallova, 20 grains glycerine and 10 grains of alcohol.

her in Tripoli, rather than Germany. For the power of possession of Tripoli is in a position to very seriously menace England's line of communication with her huge Indian and Australian dependencies. That is why the British ambassador, Lord Curzon, has been so active in preventing the Italian seizure of Tripoli, namely, to prevent its occupation by Germany. All this was laid bare the other day in the Chamber of Deputies, without any attempt at denial by the Italian government.

That Sir Rennell should have thus frustrated Germany's long cherished designs to obtain a foothold on the shores of the Mediterranean, one, moreover, which would enable her to menace the English position in Egypt, and thus bring pressure to bear upon Great Britain, has not contributed to render him any longer persona grata at Berlin.

It is curious that almost immediately after the debate in the Italian legislature at the Monte Citorio, the Foreign Office in London made public the fact that Sir Rennell's tenure of the embassy at Rome, which was about to expire, has just been extended for a couple of years. It will, therefore, be necessary to find some one else to succeed Sir William Gaschen at Berlin on his impending retirement, and in the meantime, Sir Rennell will continue to be in the city.

Spring-Rice has been mentioned, not because he wishes to leave Washington, where he is doing such excellent work, and where he has so many friends, but because he enjoys a special degree of the confidence and good will of the Kaiser, acquired during the years that he was connected with the British Embassy at Berlin. As Secretary and charge d'affaires, Lady Spring-Rice, too, is well-known at Berlin, where after the death of her mother she did the honors of the embassy of her father, Sir Francis Spring-Rice, who so long and successfully represented British interests in Germany.

Sir Rennell Rodd spent some months on this side of the Atlantic in 1908, being entertained by former Postmaster-General and Secretary of the Navy, Meyer, and by Mrs. Meyer, among others, and he is well-known in the New World as the author of at least half a dozen volumes of verse, of a monograph on Sir Walter Raleigh, and of a very remarkable work on the Princes of Achaia, the feudal lords of which he gathered while attached to the legation at Athens.

The Princes of Achaia were those Norman, French and English knights and nobles who took part in the various crusades, who settled down in Greece, especially Morea, Epirus and Albania, instead of returning home, building stately castles, according to the fashion then prevailing in the West of Europe, and thus transplanting to the East the existence of the feudal system of the Occident. For two centuries they dominated, and played an active role in the affairs of that corner of the world, influencing art and literature, but eventually most of them died out. A few of their descendants are still to be found in Northern Greece, and especially in Albania, among the number being the present Albanian generalissimo, Essad Pasha. Many picturesque ruins of their castles and strongholds, however, remain. But even the very existence of their former owners has been forgotten, alike by the people of the country, by students, and by novelists, until Sir Rennell Rodd took the trouble to peer into this long forgotten aftermath of the crusades, and to bring to light one of the most fascinating romances of history. The book portrays an immense amount of research, as well as skill in choosing from the immense amount of material at his disposal, in what may be described as an altogether virgin field.

Sir Rennell, as British ambassador at Rome, enjoys a salary of $40,000 a year, besides the possession of a palace in the Via Veneto, a superbly furnished and equipped everything necessary, including a $30,000 service of silver plate, the embassy having, moreover, a large and beautiful garden. There is also a Sir Rennell's disposal a fine villa with spacious grounds at Posilipo, in the outskirts of Naples, on the water's edge, and when, belonging for many years to Lord Rosebery, was presented by him to the English government, for use as a villa for its ambassador at Rome.

Sir Rennell greatly distinguished himself at Oxford, where he carried off all sorts of honors, including the Newdegate poem prize. Lord Rosebery became one of his warmest friends, and induced him to join the diplomatic service. He inaugurated his career in that profession as a member of the embassy of the late Lord Ampthill, at Berlin, and subsequently headed a memorable mission to the court of Abyssinia, which attracted no end of attention among the wariness of the Xezus, by the immense stature of the members of the mission, most of whom were six foot three and six foot four in height.

NO WONDER SHE IS GLAD

Only a Short Time Ago, Was Unable to Stand and Out of Heart; Now Walks Two Miles Easily

Rosedale, Okla.—"I am almost unable to describe what used to be my suffering," says Mrs. Decker Barrett, of this town. "I suffered so for over two years with womanly troubles, and had such pains that I was unable to stand on my feet."

It seemed that I could not be helped, and thought my only chance was an operation.

I took different medicines, but found no relief, and I got out of heart.

At last I commenced to use Cardui, the woman's tonic, and I am glad to say that I am very much better. I have taken five bottles of Cardui, and I can do my work all right—all my household—and can walk two miles at a time, easily.

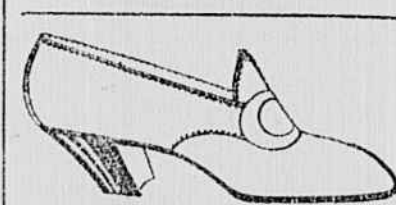

I feel like a new woman. I will always recommend Cardui to all sick and suffering women, for I know that Cardui saved my life."

Cardui has proven itself to be an ideal tonic for women.

It is composed entirely of harmless vegetable ingredients, which act specifically on the weakened womanly organs, helping to strengthen the muscles and nerves, and to build them up to health. Cardui has been in successful use for more than half a century. Give Cardui a trial. No doubt it's the very medicine you need.

N. B.—Write to: Ladies' Advisory Dept., Chattanooga Medicine Co., Chattanooga, Tenn., for Sample of Cardui and a complete book, "Home Treatment for Women," sent in plain wrapper, on request.—Advertisement.

Take good stock from the fat from the surface and for each quart of stock add the white and shell of one egg and a tablespoonful of water, well whipped together. Pour this mixture into a saucepan and heat the contents gradually, stirring to the bottom of the saucepan. Allow it to boil gently until the stock boils perfectly clear. Then remove it from the heat and pour the surface in the form of a thick, foamy foam. Season with salt and pepper, and serve with a cold water.

THE PARCEL POST AND DIRECT TRADING

The parcel post has made possible very desirable changes in suburban and urban commerce. The town dwellers can now find advantage in closer acquaintance as direct buyers and sellers without the intervention of this new condition and bringing it to the special attention of farmers' wives, the Kansas City Times suggests many details will have to be worked out before the problem of marketing farm products by parcel post can be solved to the best advantage.

As a preliminary the farm wife should be devoting her time to the creation of a public demand for her goods by preparing herself to furnish exacting kind of produce the people of the town want from the farm. She must be prepared to sell better things than the people can get from the local stores or from any other source. Her goods must be sorted for quality, cleanliness and neatness in the meantime, while she is waiting for the solution of the problems that now confront those who hope to use the parcel post, why not ship her goods to some well-established, reputable merchant? Let him sell these as the produce of the woman who sells them to him. This cannot hurt her, and she can, in fact, sell her goods to him at a profit. Let the woman make such a name for herself, having the very best things to sell that any merchant will be glad to sell them as her individual product. Let only a step from that public demand for her goods to a firmly established list of customers who will order direct from the farm. The whole problem would be solved.

With the greater extension of telephone service and free mail delivery routes, direct parcel trading is sure to increase steadily as the years go by so as to appreciably cut the cost of living. There is no reason why the town should not make full use of Uncle Sam's intervention as a go-between at a fixed rate of charge. The sooner the better, the more the merrier.

WORTH KNOWING

When making a roly-poly pudding, after spreading the paste with jam, sprinkle a layer of fine bread-crumbs before rolling and tying up. This prevents the jam from boiling out.

To use sour milk for griddle cakes, never add baking powder, but instead an even teaspoonful of baking soda to each cup of milk.

If you are fond of walnuts try roasting them for a change, and you will not care to use them as raw again. Shell the walnuts, put them in a pan with about one teaspoonful of butter to a cup or more of the nuts. Sprinkle with salt and place in a moderate oven, stirring occasionally to prevent burning. Do not allow them to become too brown, as this spoils the flavor.

A little salt added to the custard keeps it from drying and caking, and adds to the flavor.

Instead of trying to cream sugar and butter for a cake with a spoon or knife blade, try using a wire potato masher. This chops the butter finely and blends the two with little trouble in a short time.

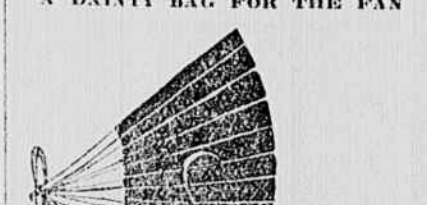

When baking custard or pumpkin pies, bake the crust a little before putting in the filling. This will keep it from getting soaked or soggy.

To make a cat stay in a new home, rub its forehead with butter, a proceeding that is said to destroy the scent of the old home. This is an old English custom.

Cleanliness is as necessary to growing plants in winter as it is to successful housekeeping. Pots and leaves both should be frequently washed and sprayed.

The Great Trials of History

TRIAL OF DR. JAMESON

Dr. Leander Starr Jameson was a British Colonial statesman who, in 1895, went to South Africa for his health, settling at Kimberley. There he rapidly acquired a great reputation as a medical man and besides having on his list many distinguished patients, he came in close contact with Cecil Rhodes, John Hays Hammond and other notables. In 1893 his influence with Lobengula was successfully exerted to induce that chieftain to grant the concessions to the agents of Rhodes which led to the formation of the British South African Company, and when that company proceeded to open up Mashonaland, Jameson abandoned his profession, and joined the expedition of 1890.

In 1891 Jameson succeeded Colquhoun as administrator of Rhodesia. At the end of 1894 "Dr. Jim," as he was familiarly called, went to England and was feted on all sides. He returned to Africa the following spring with increased prestige. On the last day of that year the world was startled to hear that Jameson, with a force of 600 men, had made a raid into the Transvaal from Mafeking in support of a projected rising in Johannesburg, which had been connived at by Rhodes at the Cape.

Jameson's force was compelled to surrender at Deersfontein. They were tried and sentenced to execution, including Hammond, who was an American citizen. Jameson and his officers, however, were finally sent to Pretoria and, after a short delay, during which the Transvaal government was clamored for their execution, President Kruger, on the surrender of Johannesburg, on January 7, handed them over to the British government for punishment.

They were tried in London under the foreign enlistment act in May, 1896, and Dr. Jameson was sentenced to fifteen months' imprisonment at Holloway. This Jameson raid was made a short time previous to the outbreak of the Boer war, and naturally attracted and encouraged that nation, and was doubtless one of the main causes of the conflict which followed.

Chief Justice who sat in judgment on Jameson and other rebel leaders was Baron Russell. In summing up his case for the jury his remarks were unusually hostile to the prisoners. He began by pointing out that none of the essential facts in the case against them had been contested, and there was no doubt that their charges were well established. He then proceeded to read a series of questions difficult to answer any way but affirmatively and against the prisoners. After an hour's absence the jury returned and answered affirmatively all the questions.

Dr. Jameson and his co-defendants were apparently unmoved. They refused to ask for a new trial, whereupon Dr. Jameson received his sentence of fifteen months, Major Sir John Willoughby was sentenced to ten months' imprisonment, Major R. White to seven months, and Captain Henry F. Coventry, Colonel R. Gray and Colonel H. F. White to five months' imprisonment.

Soon after the sentence formalities had been completed the wardens of Holloway Jail appeared and took possession of each side of the prisoners. This was the bitterest moment of all for the raiders, as up to that time they had been treated with the greatest courtesy, and had, in fact, been made heroes up to a certain extent. Dr. Jameson and his party had returned from the Transvaal during the previous February, arriving on the Victoria on the 24th. His appearance in London was the occasion of a popular demonstration of enthusiasm, for whatever may be thought of his judgment, his personal gallantry and devotion had aroused almost universal admiration in England.

The party was promptly arraigned before Sir John Bridge at the Bow Street Police Court, February 26, on the charge of having violated the foreign enlistment act in that, without the consent of her majesty, they had unlawfully prepared and set out on a military expedition against a friendly state. They were released each on his own recognizance in $10,000 bail. They were at liberty until the following July and their conviction.

Dr. Jameson was released from prison on December 2 of the same year on account of ill health. He still retained the affection of the people of Rhodesia and returned to that country after his imprisonment. In 1904 he became Prime Minister of that country. He resides at present in London.

Fresh Neckwear is MOST IMPORTANT

A pretty collar is made of lace that is merely graduated into shape when worn on the body, while a few small wires at the back of the neck hold it in place. This is a very easy style to copy, though it must not be confounded with the real Model, which is more elaborate, and needs to be completed with sharp corners. Other delightful collars are made of soft white silk or satin, very much like those seen in the old paintings of Lord Byron.

Exaggerated Byron.

Only these are slightly more exaggerated in style than the Byron collar of a few months ago. Many of these have a wire run in on either side to lift them well over the coat collar, and give that pretty "wired" effect which is so immensely becoming to many people. For summer wear there will be all kinds of muslin and embroidered neckwear, but on the whole the severe modes, after the old-fashioned Quaker and Puritan designs, will be most seen.

Easily Made.

Anyone with clever fingers is able to manufacture for herself very delightful and most charming confections of this sort with very little expenditure of time or trouble, and, indeed, there is nothing like a fresh and becoming collar for making the plainest of gowns or blouses attractive.

Hats Are Small.

Hats for the present, at any rate, are still very small, the sharply fitted brims and rather high crowns being most fashionable. A new model is a delightful example of this style. It was made of black silk, the crown being soft and slightly gathered at the edge, while the brim was of the same silk, firmly stretched over a buckram foundation. The sole trimming consisted of three curled ostrich tips in opal tones, that were wired into place on each side.

RODD IS DEBARRED FROM BERLIN COURT

He Will Not Wind Up His Career in Capital of Kaiser.

BY LA MARQUESE DE PONTENAY.

SIR RENNELL RODD, now British ambassador at Rome, has always been regarded as destined to wind up his career as representative of the British empire at Berlin, owing to his former particularly intimate relations with the imperial family. It may be remembered that it was to him that Empress Frederick and her son, the Kaiser, confided the extremely delicate task of writing a monograph of the monarch who lives in Germany history under the name of Unser Fritz. He produced the most charming and altogether sympathetic portrait of that unhappy sovereign that has ever appeared. It was printed in several languages, the proceeds being devoted to charities designated by the imperial widow.

But something has occurred of late to render it practically impossible that he should ever fill the position of British ambassador at Berlin. The other day, during the course of the discussion in the Chamber of Deputies at Home, on the subject of the expenses incurred by the Italian government in connection with the conquest of Tripoli, the story which I have already mentioned on several occasions as a rumor in these letters was confirmed, to the effect that if the Italian government had suddenly determined upon a hasty invasion of Tripoli, for which it had made no preparation whatsoever, it was because it had received official but confidential information from Sir Rennell Rodd, the British ambassador, that Germany had concluded a secret arrangement with the Sublime Porte for the acquisition of the important Tripolitan harbor of Tabrak. Indeed, Germany was actually preparing an expedition to take possession of Tabrak, with the object of the economic and political penetration of the hinterland, that is to say, of Libya.

The Foreign Minister, the Marquis of San Giuliano, and Prime Minister Giolitti, were so much stirred up by this confidential communication on the part of Sir Rennell Rodd that they insisted on his going with them from Rome to the Piedmontese Palace of Paconini, in the northern part of the kingdom, to lay the matter before the king, and it was at the conference which took place with the latter that the immediate invasion by Italy of Tripoli, which gave such deep offense to Germany, was determined upon.

Although Italy belongs nominally to the triple alliance, yet her relations with England have always been sufficiently intimate and friendly that Great Britain should prefer to have
